More Craft Discovered.

Scarcely less astonishing than the disclosures relating to the fire marshal's office is the discovery that as a legacy from Republican control of the state penitentiary there is due the state over $51,900 on old and expired contracts.

An extraordinary feature of this discovery is that in a number of instances the record of the penitentiary contain no reports of money paid and now said to be due on various contracts.

It is easy for the attorney general to unload responsibility by saying "these all date back prior to my coming into office." By so doing he also absolves the present state administration from responsibility, for Governor Harmon and the present attorney general came into office at the same time.

But why were not those old accounts collected before? In the management of one institution the sum of $51,900 is quite an item.

The attorney general says he will see whether there really is anything due the state, that he will investigate to see what action his predecessors have taken, and that if he finds the contractors "do owe something," he will take the necessary legal proceeding to collect either from the parties direct or from their bondsmen.

The people of Ohio probably never would have heard of this large amount due the state except for the change of administration.

With the revelation, discoveries in the fire marshal's office, the necessity for a change of management at the hospital and the industrial school for girls, it comes in bad grace for republican papers to say that Governor Harmon talked about "graft and corruption" during the campaign last fall and had been unable to make good since his inauguration.

Logan Boy Honored.

Harry N. Armstrong, of Logan, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Armstrong, who graduates from Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, June 17, was one of those who received notable high honors when these were handed out at the "Recognition Day" exercises Tuesday morning. He was awarded the Slocum prize of $60, the highest cash scholarship prize in the Scientific course, and in general scholarship he won "Cum Laude" or Honors, which indicates a high standard of work. For being an officer in the best military company battalion, he won a silver medal, which indicates second in best drilled officers of the company. These honors indicate a high standard of work during Mr. Armstrong's course. In announcing these honors, President Welch stated that the University had received gifts of about $90,000, mainly for endowment, during the year.
